JUNE 2005 LUNCHEON

What makes Europe the leader in sustainability and the United States a follower? If Seattle is going to lead the country in sustainability, what will it take to get us there? Over sixty professionals involved in the built environment have traveled from Seattle to Sweden, Denmark and Germany to experience urban sustainability as it is practiced there.

Join CREW Seattle on Thursday, June 9, 2005 as we welcome Patricia Chase of International Sustainable Solutions. Patricia will moderate a panel of four travelers who will talk about what they've seen, how their experiences are impacting their work and how the collective experiences of those who traveled to Europe are impacting the development of "green building" projects in Seattle. After starting a consulting practice and growing it to over 70 employees in 14 years, Patricia Chase took two years off to explore the world. She started International Sustainable Solutions to seek out the best solutions for a better world, and then to make sure they get discovered by others who need them.

Catherine Hart is an architect and project manager with VIA Suzuki Architecture, providing leadership on issues of sustainability in all project work and in the day-to-day practice of the firm.

Susan Jones, AIA, is an Affiliate Associate Professor at the University of Washington and a Principal at atelierjones llc, an architecture and planning firm that focuses on sustainable projects. She has a Masters of Architecture from Harvard and is registered in over 15 states as a professional architect in addition to being a LEED professional.

Monica Smith Alliegro is a Principal with Catapult Development, currently consulting on facility and strategic planning for the Sustainable Development Center in Seattle. Prior to joining Catapult, Monica worked in asset management at Vulcan Inc, and previously managed the international real estate portfolios for both Microsoft Corporation and Novell, Inc.

Denise Fong is a Principal with Candela with more than 22 years of experience working with architects, developers and building owners to develop lighting systems for commercial, healthcare, education, hospitality residential and civic developments. She has been honored with design awards for her innovative and creative lighting applications, including the ACT Theatre and Pacific Science Center's IMAX Theater addition.
